Description:

Description of the resource, its landscape, natural and ethnographic values, architecture, activity developed...

The Monastery of St. Anastasia in the tradition founded by Empress Theophano, wife of Leo VI the Wise, 888 AD.

However, there is no historical evidence for the existence of the monastery during the Byzantine period. In 1522 the monk Theonas (later Metropolitan of Thessaloniki and Saint) found here (between Basilika and Galatista) a ruined church and built a monastery, which flourished and gained huge real estate and many dependencies, in Halkidiki and the Balkans. In 1821 the Turks burned the monastery and his record and slaughtered all the monks. Since that time only the south wing with the groin are saved. The remaining buildings were built after the destruction by the Turks. The monastery belongs to the chapel of Saints Kirikou and Ioulittis, which was painted by Galatsianou painters in the 19th century, and is one of the few surviving examples of post-Byzantine painting in the area of Halkidiki.

The monastery belongs directly to the Ecumenical Patriarchate and currently the directed by the Metropolitan Miletus.
